Starting from an example of problems occurring by using software like RADLST or SDF2ENDF to calculate decay radiations, I will make some considerations on the advantages of a software development model that follows an open source-like approach.